

Remove Energy Drainers

Posted by Editor on Sunday, January 11, 2009 - 11:00 AM 46 Reads

According to a recent Brookings Institute study, 85 percent of American companies' assets are human talent.. Therefore, leaders must meet the needs of their employees by creating more effective employee relations, with a less stressful work environment. Energy drainers like cubicle walls, harsh wall colors and even certain textures can make it harder to be as productive and creative as possible.

Pat Heydlauff in an article, "Remove Energy Drainers from Your Workplace: Keep Your Employees Happy and Productive," learn how to utilize the principles of color and design to create a more employee-friendly atmosphere.

